Translation:

In a certain city, there was a man who was very kind to everyone. He would always help others whenever they needed it. People loved him for his kindness.

One day, a brother and sister came to him with a problem. They needed help to build a house for their new baby. The man listened to their request and immediately went to work. He hired workers and supervised the construction. The house was completed in a short time, and the brother and sister were very grateful.

The man continued to help people in need. He was known throughout the city for his kindness and generosity. People would often ask for his help, and he never refused them.

One day, a man came to him with a very difficult problem. He needed help to find a new job. The man listened to his request and thought for a moment. Then he said, "I will help you find a job." He went to work on the problem and soon found a job for the man. The man was very grateful.
